Half the fashionable houses in town drew down their green shades last week, and the fashionable quarters are beginning to look dull, but the gay people are not all gone. The Park driveway veral afternoons last week was well filled with handsome equipages, and some of the shining lights of the social firmament were seen in the throng. Still, households are in process of distribution, and those of the smart world whose homes are not ready for tifem are or will be in a day or two off to Tuxedd, or to pleasant reunions at Meadow Brook, Westbury and Westchester country

KING" OF VIENNA.

Johann Strauss, who inherited the musical talents nd genius of his father, the first Johann Strauss, was born in Vienna on October 25, 1826. His father, who even then bore the title of the "Waltz King." had converted the music of the ancient Ländler, that country dance whose real home is Styria, into the rhythmical time and movement of the modern waltz, and, with the sid of two friends—

Vienna, June 3.-Johann Strauss, the famous

one of them the well-known Lanner-laid the foundation of the famous orchestral band which obtained a European fame, and established the permanent dominion of the waltz as a social dance. The elder Strauss died in London in 1849. The childhood of the younger Johann Strauss was far from happy. The determination of the father to suppress all musical development in his sons, Johann and Joseph, led to many altercations in the household, as they were encouraged by their mother, who strained every nerve to give her sons a fitting musical education. The first composition of the youthful Johann is still preserved under the name of "Der erste Gedanke." He was only in his sixth year, when one day, seated at the old-fashioned square plano, he fumbled among the notes with his untried fingers until he had discovered the melody that he sought for of his first waltz.

The famous Viennese composer of dance music as operettas, who died yesterday,

The two boys, unknown to their father, became clever planists; but though he was affected to tears on hearing their brilliant performance of his own compositions, he obstinately refused to allow them to devote themselves to music as a profession. Johann was sent to the technical school to complete his education, but was soon dismissed from it for singing aloud during lectures. His father's intention to enter him as bookkeeper at a bank was frustrated by the wife, who out of her scanty means obtained for the boy the best musical education in her power, among his masters being the choir director of the University Church, Joseph Drechsler, who conscientiously developed the boy's talent, hoping to make of him a classical composer, At the age of nineteen, however, Johann Strauss, who, like his father, preferred gay music to grave. made his debut with a small orchestral band at the famous restaurant gardens of Dommayer, at Hietzing, near Vienna, and the Viennese crowded eagerly to hear the concert of the young Strauss who had entered into rivalry with his distinguished father. The concert was an immense success, and when, after his own compositions, stormily and repeatedly encored, he gave them his father's well-known waltz, "Lorelei Rhein Klänge," he rose more than ever in public favor. His father was forcibly brought to the gardens, and an apparent econciliation took place.

His first operetta, "Indigo," appeared in 1871, and was followed in 1873 by "Carnival in Rome," which was enthusiastically received, and "Fledermaus," the last-named being by far the most popular of all, and undoubtedly not only his own masterpiece, but one of the most delightful of all productions in this style. It has had enormous and undiminished popularity in Germany and Austria, and is well known to lovers of comic opera the world over. These were followed by "The Queen's Lace Handkerchief," "Biindekuh," "The Merry War," "The Gypsy Baron," in which he struck a somewhat more serious note than in some of his other operettas; "Prinz Methusalem," "Cagliostro," "A Night in Venice," "Simplicius," "Jabuka," "Prin-cess Nanette" and "Waldmeister," His "Ritter Pazman" was an attempt at grand opera, but was less successful. His last work is a ballet called "Cinderella," written on a libretto for which he offered a prize last winter. offered a prize last winter.

It is needless to mention the hundreds of waltzes, polkas and other dance tunes composed by Strauss, which are universally known and beloved for their musical qualities, their lackhaustible invention and melodic freshness, the insinuating charm of their rhythm and movement, and their delightful instrumentation, as well as for their irresistible appeal to the feet of the dancer on the ballroom floor. Most of these things are constantly in evidence also in his operettas, in which dance rhythms predominate, and in which the flow of melody is ceaseless and spontaneous. spontaneous.

Strauss was made conductor for the balls of the Austrian imperial court in 1863. He continued at this post for a number of years, during which many of his most popular dances were composed, but resigned it after he had made his brilliant success as a composer for the stage. He married in 1862 a popular singer, thenfette Treffz, who died in 1878; thereafter he married another dramatic singer, Angelica Dittrich. He leaves a son, who only a few weeks ago brought out his first operetta in a Vienna theatre, which the reports reaching this country credited with being a success.

Strauss made many tours with his orchestra throughout Europe, visiting St. Petersburg, Paris, London and the cities of Italy. He came to the United States in 1859 to take part in the Peace Jubilee in Boston. Like his father, he conducted with violin in hand, swaying to the rhythm of the music and sometimes playing with the orchestra, in the manner illustrated a few years ago in this country at the visit of his younger brothers. Joseph and Eduard, both musicians and composers of dance music, but neither his equal in talect. Eduard is still living, and active as a conductor in Vienna.

Richard Wagner was an ardent admirer of the "Waltz King," and wrote of him in 1832: "A single Strauss waltz surpasses as much in grace, delicacy and real musical conception most of the laboriously soft on a brother his equal in talect. Eduard is still living, and active as a conductor in Vienna. Richard Wagner was an ardent admirer of the "Waltz King," and wrote of him in 1832: "A single Strauss waltz surpasses as much in grace, delicacy and real musical conception most of the laboriously composed foreign productions as the Vienna St. Stephan steeple rears itself above the hollow pillars of a Paris boulevard." Strauss, on his side, was the first to introduce to the vienness the inness parts of "Lohengrin." Great friendship existed between Strauss and Brahms. On an autograph fan belonging to Mme, Strau

GEORGE' N. TERRY.

Atlantic City, N. J., June 3.—George N. Terry, who was the first proprietor of the Hoffman House, New-York, died here last night, from heart failure He was sixty-one years of age, and unmarried. Mr. Terry accumulated a fortune and retired from the management and ownership of the hotel about thirty years ago. THOMAS W. LOWELL.

Thomas W. Lowell, a well-known clubman o

Brooklyn and a merchant of Manhattan, died at his home. No. 28 South Portland-ave., early yes-terday morning, as the result of an operation for appendictis, which was performed three weeks ago. Mr. Lowell was taken ill about a month ago. ago. Mr. Lowell was taken as the After a week the doctor deemed it wise to perform an operation for the removal of the appendix. It was accomplished by Drs. Calvin F. Barber and William Maddren. It seemed to have been successful, but the wound reopened a few days ago and Mr. Lowell died yesterday. He was born in Claremont, N. H., in 1841, coming from an old New-England family. After some schooling in Bellows Falls, Vt., he went to Milwaukee, and later to Buffalo, where his education was completed. Mr. Lowell came to Newvork in 1850, and at once entered mercantile life. For many years he had been connected with the firm of Lesher, Whitman & Co., of No. 502 Broadway, and at the time of his death was partner in the concern. He was a member of the New-England Boolety, and the Oxford, the Riding and her steam yacht Scythian, which is anchored off the New-York Yacht Club station, at Whitestone, Long Isand.

RENJAMIN F. CLARK.

Benjamin F. Clark died here Friday afternoon, at the age of eighty-five years, leaving a widow, Mrs. Margaret J. Clark, and a son, Marvin R. Clark, Mr. Clark was born on June 24, 1814, in Petersburg, Rensseiger County, N. Y., and came to this city in the year 1834 to work for his brother, Stephen S. Clark, then a presperous shipping and produce merchant. In 1835 B. F. Clark went into business for himself, and continued as a wholesale produce merchant uptil 1847, when he failed in the general panic. One creditor prevented a compromise.

Mr. Clark accepted the place of salesman with a friendly firm, and within ten years had saved suffi-cient money and paid off his creditors in full. He was proud of this accomplishment, as also of the fact that never in his life was a judgment procured against him. He was a subscriber to The Tribune, and read this newspaper from its first issue to a few days before his death. Horace Greeley sent the produce of his farm at Chappaqua to him for sale. He was originally a Whig. He joined the Republican party at its inception, and continued until the end of his life to be an earnest advocate of Republican principles, although he refused office. In the Draft Riots in this city Mr. Clark rescued a negro from a mob at the risk of his own life. For seventy years he was a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church For many years he was trustee, class leader and Sunday-school superintendent of the Duane Street Sunday-school superintendent of the Duane Street Methodist Episcopal Church, secretary of the Meth-odist Episcopal Sunday-school Union and the Meth-odist Episcopal Missionary Society, and a life mem-ber of many other religious organizations. The funeral was held on Saturday evening, and the interment will be in the family plot at Cypress Hills Cemetery this morning.

ISAAC G. JOHNSON.

Isaac Gale Johnson died yesterday at his home. in Spuyten Duyvil, in his sixty-eighth year. He was born in Troy, and was graduated in 1848 from the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. He then gave two winters to special studies in Philadelphia, after which he entered upon the manufacture, in Spuyten Duyvil, of malleable iron, and, in later years of steel. His scientific attainments, inventiveness, energy and sound judgment secured him prosperity in business. He was on the boards of several banks and insurance companies. In recent years he was interested in projectiles. He secured a patent for a cap for armor-piercing shells, which was purchased by the Navy Department and proved its value in the destruction of Admiral Cervera's fleet. He was for many years a deacon in the Warburton Avenue Baptist Church, and superintended a union Sunday-school near his home gifts and counsel. He leaves a widow, who was Miss Jane E. Bradley, of Sunderland, Vt., and five sons. These were all associated with him in business. His father was Ellas Johnson, of Troy. He also leaves a sister, the widow of Professor J. C. Long, and a brother, Professor E. H. John-son, of Crozer Theological Seminary.

JOHN C. MOTT.

John C. Mott, of this city, died at Warminister, Bucks County, Penn., on Friday. The funeral will be held on Wednesday at his home, No. 230 Central Park West, and burial will be at Hamilton, N. Y. A widow, a son and a daughter survive him. Mr. Mott was born in 1849 in Saratoga County, this State. He was the son of Samuel R. Mott, in his day a prominent political figure of Madison

John C. Mott was treasurer of the Genesee Fruit Company, and also director and secretary of the Weston-Mott Company, of Utica, N. Y., manufacturers of wheels. He was senior partner of the C. A. Mott Company, of this city, dealers in carbonating apparatus, and was associated in business with ex-Mayor Franklin Edson.

JOHN M. DAYTON.

GENERAL OTIS ON THE PHILIPPINES.

NO HOPE OF SILENCING SLANDER. From The Indianapolis Journal.

It is not expected that the calm statement of facts by General Otis will silence the slanderers of those who are uphoiding the authority of the United States in the Philippines. They will go right on with their malignant falsehoods, so that it is necessary to reiterate the facts which General Otis has set forth. It is about as necessary to fight the slanderers as the Tagals.

NEVER A MORE RIGHTEOUS WAR. From The St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

After reading this candid and businesslike statement, which is entirely calm in tone and fairly presents the whole case, every American who cares for his country will say that no war in which this Nation ever engaged was more righteous and necessary than that with the armed Tagals of Luzon.

EVERY EFFORT MADE FOR PEACE. From The Boston Globe.

No one can read his straightforward and at thentic recital of events and the correspondence between himself and Aguinaldo without being covinced beyond all shadow of a doubt that ever effort was made on the American side to avoid conflict and to effect a peaceable settlement opoints in dispute wherever possible without compromising our position as a nation.

OTIS WILL GET WHAT HE NEEDS From The Baltimore American.

It is the consensus of opinion that if General Otla needs an effective force of 30,000 men in the Philip-pines, he will get just what he needs. THE RIGHT MAN.

From The Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin.

General Otis evinces a sagacity in dealing with the false and treacherous Aguinaido that will make the American people think he is the man in the right place.
